WENDELL PHILLIPS ON THE WAR--PORTRAIT OF SEWARD. At the usual abolition gathering in Harm ny Grove, Farmingham, on the 4th of July, Wendell Phillips made his usual speech with variations to suit the hour. We copy some of these to exhibit the drift of the thought and talk of his school of reformers:

"The South and the North both stand convicted to-day of the want of statesmanship. Davis and Stephens didn't believe the North would fight, Saward and Cameron didn't believe the South would dare to secede. The un-conquerable will of the people had brought us to war, and Got be praised. The South were as unanimous to-day as the thirteen united colonies were in 1776, and they were stronger. He diamissed therefore utterly the question whether the Gulf States want to she wants, the North doesn't.

Did any one believe that Virginia and South Carolina would stay subdued? Until we depopulate the gulf States we can never subdue em. Not till we call four millions of blacks Into liberty can we succeed in settling this nestion-not till we say that the stars and stripes mean liberty to every one. Let this war go on twelve months, and England will acknowledge the independence of the southern We must have emancipation or disenion. Mr. Seward would sacrifice anything for the Union. When several of the Southern States withdrew from the Union because they feared the policy of an administration which was pledged to carry into practice the doctrines of the Chicago platform, and despaired of obtaining from the North any further guarantees for who should venture to array themselves in opposition to the federal government. They implored the border States to act at the same time a loyal and prodent part, and to maintain their old relations with the North. They was commerce than in one of the ocean militial their old relations with the North. Then, and not until then, did these States determine upon resistance to the illegal measures of the fanatical administration. Then the same voices which had protested against the precipitancy of the gulf States, were lifted up in angry remonstrance against Virginia. If, said they, will probably remain over for a month. Our Foreign Relations. rom the Albany Argus.]

The blockade of the southern ports is so in efficient as to be nugatory under the rule of the congress of Paris, and especially the in-terpretation of the British Admiral in comand of the fleet on our coasts. The House has passed the bill to close the ports of the insurgent States and collect the revenue on shipboard. This, it is argued, hanges the character of the blockade and derives foreign powers of all opportunity to inerfere on any pretense, whether the actual ockade is efficient or not.
